

Marx's Capital in German

By Shomit Sirohi

I. Germanishtem

Initiation to the language – German – ishtem, like a custom. German is customary language as well, it's a custom to go to a German class, a custom to learn the language – and then it is philosophical as well, to add philosophy to the German class you went to. And that is all philosophy and language debates – in though initiation. And then the problems of life are solved in the linguistic – understander or comprehensher, finally meaning – under-prepared, under-worked, over-worked, worker on the matter, is better, a working class idea, like working hard and writing. Deep reflection, differentiation, formal differences – classifying, maybe speculative classifying – this then is simple German linguistic philosophy.

II. Marx's Capital

Classify – economics. Or preferred, capitalist economy with communist politics – sophicienatige –

A more sophisticated argument, artistic, Renaultism.
